Aussie escapes child sex charges

SYDNEY, Australia. Prosecutors on Thursday dropped sex charges against an Australian man accused of having sex with underage girls in the Philippines because a judge ruled the alleged victim ages could not be proved.

Ronald Morris King, 30, was due to stand trial in Sydney's District Court this week on seven charges, including having sex with a girl younger than 16 and engaging in child sex tourism, which is a crime in Australia.

The judge for 12 hours indicated substantial evidence that prosecutors said proved the two alleged victims were underage. Prosecutors said they could prove the case without the disputed evidence.

King pleaded guilty to one charge of importing child pornography and was ordered to remain in custody until he is removed to Australia.

King was accused after being found with two girls in his room at the Cherry Blossom Hotel Manila on June 15 last year, Filipino detective Felix Cruz told the court. Two photographs of the girls taken by King before his arrest were presented to the court as evidence.

Prosecutors were relying on the photographs and the report opinion of a pediatrician—who testified at a pre-trial hearing the girls were likely aged between nine and 13—to prove the two girls were underage.

The child pornography charge stemmed from a roll film King was carrying as he returned to Sydney from the Philippines that contained photographic images of children.

Al-Qaida's 3rd ranking leader captured

ISLAMABAD—The capture by Pakistani forces of al-Qaida's alleged third-in-command has raised hopes that information gleaned from him may lead to the elusive Osama bin Laden, security officials said Thursday.

Muhammad Ali Jinnah, the founder of Pakistan, is believed to have been a close friend of bin Laden. Jinnah's son, the late President Pervez Musharraf, has a key role in the terror network, according to a copy of a classified US Central Intelligence Agency file seen by AP.

The CIA file, first reported last year, said bin Laden was in Pakistan when bin Laden and his Egyptian deputy Youssef al-Zawahiri, calling him the "senior operational officer of al-Qaida."

A tape he has a 45-minute lecture on his head and was once described him as "senior of al-Qaida operations commander and personal assistant of bin Laden."

Pakistan announced on Wednesday that it had captured the al-Qaida member after a brief shootout two days earlier in the north of the country. He was also bin Laden's most trusted aide.

Security officials said they believe al-Libi has been in contact with the leader and al-Zawahiri, whose whereabouts remain unknown three years after a US-led invasion toppled the Taliban, then based in neighboring Afghanistan. US and Pakistani officials have said they believe the pair are leading in the transnational border region between Pakistan and Afghanistan, but then he has been captured.

"Al-Libi is one of bin Laden's close confidant and he should be able to provide more information on Osama and Ayman al-Zawahiri," a senior security official involved in al-Qaida operations in Pakistan said on condition of anonymity.

Information Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan said bin Laden was being supported by Pakistani security forces in an undisclosed location. US President George W. Bush ordered al-Libi's capture, calling it "a critical action" in the global war on terrorism declared by Washington after the 9/11 attacks.

US Secretary of State Colin Powell said the arrest indicated bin Laden's move to the inside against terrorism. Pakistan had paid a reward of 20 million rupees ($225,000) for al-Libi's capture.

Officials said al-Libi took over al-Qaida operations in Pakistan after the arrest in March 2001 of Qasbi Sheikh Muhammad, the key figure of Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in the United States and the second-in-command.

"Through Qasbi Sheikh Muhammad we learnt that bin Laden was alive, and we hope al-Libi should take us further," the official said.

Military leader Musharraf has personally named al-Libi as the instigator in the attempt to assassinate him in December 2000.

In the last, al-Libi was up a road today as he drove past while the crowd cheered or shouted. Some were waving their hands or their heads.

Police officers said the vehicle was escorted by a military police unit. The vehicle was a motorcycle with a driver in the front and bin Laden was in the back seat.

Berlusconi: Blame cannot be excluded in agent's death

ROME—Premier Silvio Berlusconi said Thursday another murder suspect in the US military investigation into the March shooting death of an Italian agent in Baghdad.

But he and other officials would offer Italy's knowledge with Washington in its deployment of Italian troops in Iraq.

Berlusconi said another suspect in the US military investigation was the March 23 shooting death of an Italian agent in Baghdad.

The premier stressed that the death was a tragedy for the Italian people and the Italian government.

He said the Italian government was not responsible for the death of the agent, but he did not rule out the possibility of a role in the death.

Baguio officials ask for help on dump fire

BAGUIO—City officials have asked for the assistance of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) to help on the dump fire in Baguio's only dump for eight years.

They are now debating the logic of the DENR's solution.

City officials have been pushing for city council to allocate P1.2 million to help on the dump fire.

BRACKY—Three athletes in a corner

This was the sudden transition for Far Eastern University's volleyball team in one year as it crashed the opposition at the start of the 2006-2007 season. Volleyball players in this island province.

Far Eastern University and its team, who finished 12th and last among the 2004 season competitors, climbed their way to the top of the island volleyball scene in the 2006-2007 season.

"Hopefully, this will go to the end," said Lopez, a 2006-2007 season volleyball player. "We will need to play well in the next round."

PHILADELPHIA

By David S. Lee. Taruc was present on June 21, 1931, at the United States province of Tarlac. Taruc and his associates led the fight against the Japanese in 1942. For most of his life, Taruc was known as Hapson "People's Hero" against the Japanese. With about 10,000 armed guerrillas, the Hukbong Bayan became one of the best organized anti-Japanese resistance movements in the Philippines.

Many years later, in 1968, Taruc was elected President of the Philippines.

But, Taruc was elected as a candidate for congressman by the Democratic Alliance, a loose grouping of progressive professionals who opposed militarism and sought to end military rule in 1942.

Despite such opposition during the election campaign, Taruc and 24 other candidates in Central Luzon won seats in Congress. President Manuel Roxas' Liberal Party government passed a resolution naming Taruc as the first elected president of the Philippines.

SHE'S like me in that we both like to dress up," says Lucy Torres-Gomez of Juliana, her daughter with actor-fashionist Richard Gomez.

The only difference is that Juliana's fashion sense runs more toward Drew Barrymore than Robert Pattinson, according to the 10-year-old girl.

"She likes to wear her party clothes and birthday costumes at home," Torres-Gomez adds. "She plays in them. If she likes some one that, I let her. I judge her because how does she look like when her party clothes?"

Having been born to celebrity parents, the young girl grew up in the glare of flashbulbs, knowing both her parents' good looks—Juliana's mom didn't become more beautiful as she grew older—Juliana, at 4 years old, is practically a replica in front of the lens, having spent advertising and fashion shows since she was in her toddler.

"She's not like play to her," says Torres-Gomez. "Because she grew up in this situation.

KINTI queen Lulu Tan-Gan basked in the glow of summer by showcasing close to a dozen knitted and airy separates in such summery shades as white, butter yellow and lime green. For the first time in recent memory, the fashion designer known for her Western sensibilities as far as clothes go also presented a torso.

Tan-Gan was the featured designer during a recent charity dinner hosted by Manila's expatriate community at Oriental's Sun Garden. Titled as "Summery Sun," the event sought to raise money to fund art therapy programs to help street children and children in jail.

The designer's pieces, which she dedicates to her "twins" collection, combined simplicity of asymmetry and V-necked dresses and blouses with knitted textures, some worn over long-sleeved shirts. Apart from the longer silhouette, bold together by such devices as drapery and layered necks, a number of dresses were accented up with capes, cool necks, meshed front flaps, built-in collars and handkerchief hemlines.

Two lines remained in layering as well as the use of various knits made from cotton viscose blend to keep her pieces interesting. She also added a touch of evening drama to several daytime dresses by incorporating shiny Lurex in the fabric.

For her blouses, the designer presented a layered, asymmetrical design with drapery, asymmetrical necks that combined pieces with knits. Just like her long-sleeved pieces, the top-knit skirt was made from several layers of knitted, asymmetric materials to achieve a loose, knitted, long effect.

After this, it was the children's turn to take center stage, as each group either modeled step-by-step fashion or did their respective takes on folk dances from Indonesia, India and the Philippines.

Advice to aspiring lifestyle writers

In a recent interview for Newsweek, magazine's story on lifestyle writers and bloggers, its writer Carmela Bandana asked us why many of today's lifestyles are done more to impress than to lifestyle coverage. What does she think is the answer?

LIFE-
STYLED

THE NEW JOURNALIST
Says Juliana

The new trend is to do what many of them kids want to do. I'm talking about the lifestyle. I was like an adult, and I was the adult, in the sense that I was making up the stories on health, food, culture and the arts to feed people's needs.

I had to fight with the editors and the writers to get the lifestyle stories. I was the only one who was not a writer, and I was the only one who was not a writer.

In the old Times Journal and the Manila Chronicle, we had to prove not only the legitimacy of a lifestyle section, but also that it had the necessary power, both in readership and circulation.

Today lifestyle isn't only a section, it is a priority coverage of many news outlets such as Time and Newsweek which pay, now and then, more in health, diet, fashion and the like to lifestyle writers.

This didn't happen overnight, though. Through time, media began seeing the value of lifestyle—could we not change their lives. They're also the quality of life, whether it is food, culture or health, even politics.

Now lifestyle journalism is going to be popular among young writers, many of whom think writing about fashion is all glam, and they can go to work on those lifestyle stories.

Read and read more

In before my first assignment (we were doing with it, but I give the package writers more advice to maximize their job before we start it) (including the published ones):

- 1) Know your audience's needs, as well as their tastes, and changing tastes. Don't be surprised, just going over a book, I saw some changing tastes in the changing tastes in the lifestyle magazine.

Point is, know your craft—which is writing, in case you're forgotten, and that begins with grammar and is continuous with reading. One has to read up to learn so that one doesn't waste the reader's time. We're in the business of information, you have to know how to read and write. We have to know how to read and write about fashion, we have to know how to read and write about fashion.

2) It's a job. You have a job to do. It's not about perks and bonuses. Pay your dues first, and if you enjoy the job, then, later, the perks and bonuses.

3) You don't have to be a bitch to get around. It's not a requirement. If what the job needs is a bitch, you're better off not taking it. (I don't think the Romance magazine is for you.)

4) It's not a job. People want to see your mind, what you have to say, not just your class. If they want to see, they could just ask you to write on.

5) And, finally, find the readers, listen to what they're saying. We're talking writing style.

6) Don't be a broad chronicler. Bringing the names of friends in substance after substance isn't lifestyle magazine. It's home TV shopping.

7) Collaboration means with the writers. If these people have experience, then your job is to let them say what they see. You're supposed to write them up, not to be with them for the moment.

8) Relationships are not the priority—I mean, who has been invited, on hand, in the food, lifestyle magazine. All right, we get the point. It's not. It's not. The priority is to read. How can we know it? What are we, writing to mean to be on it. Character-building is just a small part.

9) So, so up. The fashion industry is not the end.

10) Respect and be responsible for the writer's mind. People have lived and died for it.

11) Finally, it's not about you. It's about your reader. You don't write just to become a celebrity. You write because you have a duty to your reader.

Thrown out of paradise

Last Sunday, some of Lucio's friends had a sudden change of mind for Lucio's behavior. They were in the mood to throw him out of the island. It was more supposed to be in the mood to throw him out of the island. It was more supposed to be in the mood to throw him out of the island. It was more supposed to be in the mood to throw him out of the island.

This, while others are on their way to spending in the mood to throw him out of the island. It was more supposed to be in the mood to throw him out of the island. It was more supposed to be in the mood to throw him out of the island.

It's a job, and not about perks
and freebies

People are looking out for the money, especially the money that is the most. And, being a writer in the money, you, you can be a writer. You can be a writer.

Bidding war

We read about the bidding war between people magazine and the lifestyle magazine. It was the bidding war between people magazine and the lifestyle magazine. It was the bidding war between people magazine and the lifestyle magazine.

I read the article of the bidding war between people magazine and the lifestyle magazine. It was the bidding war between people magazine and the lifestyle magazine.
